STYLE TERRORISTS

PHOTOGRAPHY TONI THORIMBERT

“It is a tale of the times. In the early part of the Eighties, a gang of idealistic young hedonists began congregating on the streets of west London and in the nightclubs of deepest Soho. Before long they began forming ideas about how to break out of their playpen and into the big time, namely the Glamour Industry. And quickly, from humble beginnings, they became international style terrorists. They were singers, photographers, stylist and their mentor, a quiet man from Dundee called Ray Petri. Ray was a stylist also; but then he was so much more than that. A shy man with a stoic resolve, he possessed an uncanny coolness, when the term was anything but pejorative. The Clint Eastwood of trendy London, even Ray’s voice was square-jawed.” That was Buffalo.

Dylan Jones, ‘Buffalo’ by Mitzi Lorenz, London 2000.
